

dear,

let me write you, so i can write and so you can read and know that i put time and effort into doing so. it'll change your perception of our communication, if you know that i did this. Dear, how have you been, i'll start. I'll wonder off to islands of personal everyday, trees of mental growth and roots of endless effort, to then console you with a general idea of how i have been, and again, question all your drafts, maps, plans, how they are, how it all has been. I'll go a bit deeper into it, to make sure you remember how much i care, how i listen when you speak. I'll then go on elaborating on people we both know, accentuating how precious, yet not always consequent these lovely ones are. I'll use good adjectives, to between the lines speak out my frustrations. I'll also tell you about the other day, what i saw back then. I'll conclude with an expression of my ever-constant longing to meet you again soon, and I might mention three-word sentences including love, me and you. I'll sign with all the curls my name has to offer, possibly i'll P.S. you, but most of all, I will have written you.
